

Lea Chin-Sang
leachinsang@gmail.com
973-424-7144

JPMorgan has filed a lawsuit against entrepreneur Charlie Jarvis for tricking them into funding $175 million into her financial planning startup for college students. According to the suit, she hired a data scientist to artificially create more than half of the user base with fake names, addresses and colleges. The data scientist, George Santos, claims this is "just a misunderstanding".

Ms. Jarvis, who was featured in Forbes' 30 Under 30 in 2019, has Forbes employees upset that they now have to rewrite "0" on their "Days Without Fraud" whiteboard. Just 44 days after the FTX Crypto scandal, helmed by another 30 Under 30 alumni, Forbes editors were looking forward to the pizza party at 50 Days Without Fraud.

—

South Carolina's Supreme Court has struck down the 6 week abortion ban, stating it's not enough time to take reasonable steps. They're absolutely correct, it's not even enough time to watch Avatar 2.

6 weeks is however enough time for lesbians to meet, move in, marry and open a joint bank account.

—

Bed, Bath and Beyond is looking to become Bed, Bath and The Great Beyond, as the company is deciding whether to file for bankruptcy. A major loss to suburban teenagers with nothing better to do besides wander around strip malls and marry out of high school.

Though Bed, Bankrupt and Beyond's coupons never expire, it seems that the company itself might.

—

Jeremy Renner shared his first update from the hospital after being run over by his snowplow. His sister states that he is recovering steadily and has become friends with his roommates in the hospital room, one of whom is recovering from having an anvil dropped on him and the other is recovering from running into a brick wall painted like a road.

Our newest entry in the Florida Man Saga is former President of Brazil, Jair Bolsonaro. The 67-year-old was seen in a Publix supermarket doing what he did back in Brazil --- wandering around aimlessly, looking lost, and ruining everyone's day. Of course, it is Florida, so everyone's day was probably already ruined.

A coup was also attempted in Brazil by Bolsonaro's supporters. They stormed a government building, similar to our own insurrection, but unlike ours, 300 of them were arrested on the spot. Apparently, that's a thing you can do. At the end of the day, nothing's more embarrassing than getting arrested fighting for a man living just 8 miles away from Gatorland.